2. Uses of the gerund

a) Accusative

We have seen that, for the role of direct object, we use the infinitive as such:

- Volo legere I WANT TO READ.

Then, if as direct object we do not use the gerund in accusative (usually we need a noun in the accusative if it is to perform the role of direct object, but it is not so if it is an infinitive), what do we use the accusative of the gerund for?

The use of the accusative of the gerund has nothing to do with direct objects (let's remember that it is usually preceded by the preposition ad). In fact it is the only case of the gerund which is not used for the usual function of that case, and the meaning it has is one of purpose:

- Venio ad ludendum I COME TO PLAY.
- Milités ad pugnandum venient THE SOLDIERS WILL COME TO FIGHT.
- Studium ad pugnandum virtusque derear (Caesar, Bellum Civile). THE DESIRE FOR FIGHTING AND BRAVERY WAS ABSENT
- Exercitus Romanorum ad pugnandum concitatus est (Iulius Frontinus, Strategemata).
- Scio te ... ad occidendum me venisse I KNOW THAT YOU HAVE COME TO KILL ME

(Caesar, Bellum Civile).

Its use after the ablatives causa or gratia is very common, and the whole construction will have a purpose meaning:

- Domum iniit dormiendi causa/gratia HE WENT INTO THE HOUSE FOR THE SAKE OF SLEEPING.
- Si praedandi causa ad eos venissent, ... (Caesar, De Bello Gallico). IF THEY HAD COME TO THEM FOR THE SAKE OF PLUNDERING, ...

b) Genitive

The use of the gerund in genitive is identical to the use of any noun in genitive:

- Librum scripsi de arte legendi I HAVE WRITTEN A BOOK ABOUT THE ART OF READING.
- Cupidus sum bibendi I AM DESIROUS OF DRINKING.
- Bomilcar, ... cupidus incepta patrandi ..., litteras ad eum per homines fidelis mittit BOMILCAR, DESIROUS OF CARRYING OUT WHAT HAD ALREADY BEGUN, SENDS HIM A LETTER BY MEANS OF FAITHFUL MEN (Sallust, Bellum Iugurthinum).
